1. Until 1949 units of the Russian Army were the only military force in Slupsk (Stolp - P55/H09). Since then, however, Polish units have completely replaced the Russian. It is reported that there are so many military units in Slupsk that soldiers outnumber the civilian population.
2. One unit in the town was a heavy artillery regiment. The second was an armored (pancerna) regiment. It is estimated that the second had between 30 and 50 tanks of a type somewhat smaller than the wartime German Tiger.
3. There are a number of partisan groups active outside of Slupsk. Members are recruited from the population of German extraction and Army deserters. Partisans visit Borzecino, a town near Slupsk, weekly in search of food. They are reported to be given aid willingly from the local population.
